

David Almeida

Engenders the concepts of memory, body, phantasmagoria, and optical perception, creating canvases in which the intimacy of a culture or people is subtly manifested in the landscape. Places and sensations dialogue with his methods and processes of representation by the usage of various media and supports such as canvas, linen, wood, ceramics and engraving. Almeida lives and works in São Paulo, Brazil.

Téo Betin

Builds sculptures that are both-but-not architecture and/or object. Betin blends assemblage and photographs he confines in glass, playing with space our perception of interior and exteriors while questioning the concept of absence. Betin lives and works between Paris (France) and Maputo (Mozambique).

A residency connects a person to a place in a certain period of time. Seven international artists and one US-based artist made that choice for New York. In Residency at RU brings together this eclectic group of multi-disciplinary artists whose residencies were either postponed or interrupted in March 2020 because of the pandemic. Finally here, these artists are exposed to the vibrant art scene of this city, becoming part of its creative fabric. For the show they will occupy a vacant storefront on the Upper East Side, exploring and exchanging their reflections and processes with new work, and ultimately giving back to our community.

Sandra Eula Lee

A multidisciplinary artist who re-frames and transforms material artifacts within her industrial and hand-made forms. Shaped by ideas of development in urban and rural contexts in the U.S., South Korea, and China where she has lived, Lee explores relationships between labor, ethics of making, and our built environment. Lee works between Jersey City and PA where she runs the Expanded Sculpture program at Franklin & Marshall College.
